Town Teams: Making it Happen

How can developers work constructively with local governments and communities to create great places?

Designing and delivering the 'hardware' is part of the solution, but vibrant, connected and resilient communities need more than just high quality buildings, parks and streets.

Town teams are positive and proactive organisations that include businesses, landowners and residents working collaboratively with their local government to improve a place or area. There are currently 34 town teams and the movement is growing!

Co-founders of Town Team Movement, Jimmy Murphy and David Snyder, will talk about how they are working with local governments and communities to create a positive, 'yes' culture. They'll use case studies from inner city, suburban and regional contexts and discuss the future of the place-led approach. If you are a developer, planner or work in local government this is a not to be missed information session!
